Firstly I would say that I am not so good at making choices. When I was in Eleventh class I chose commerce because I thought science would be so hard for me, though I was good in science, and humanities was not meant for me. So I chose commerce, and cherry on the cake was that I chose commerce with math, in which I had zero interest. So this was me in making choices.

I had two plans before getting into college. If I get B.com I would go for an MBA or any banking exam and if I get English (Hons.) I will prepare for the SSC Exam. These are the things I had in my mind before getting in this course. I was not a reader, I didn't have any interest in reading novels, dramas, or any kind of book which took so many days to complete. But my thinking changed after taking so many classes, now I came to know what English language is really all about. Not only are there different stories and dramas, it shows us different cultures from around the world. All this has made me realize how deep English is and we are just on the surface. In my point of view it's not only the course which makes a student more interested in it but also professors who show the students what the course actually is.
